Film locations draw set-jetters

Loved the film? Why not join the growing number of people touring the British Isles in search of movie locations? Dave Richardson reports

SET-JETTERS – people who want to visit the location where a film or television series was made – are now a key element in UK tourism marketing. The release of the film version of The Da Vinci Code in May is expected to lead to a major increase in visitors to places in Britain that feature in the story. VisitBritain has already produced seven movie maps, and one focusing on north Wales was released at the British Travel Trade Fair in Birmingham this month. VisitBritain's head of campaigns, Seren Welch, claims that one in five overseas visitors was motivated by the big screen. "Our focus over the next few months will be on The Da Vinci Code, with our partner Eurostar. It is all about a journey from Paris to London to Edinburgh, to seek out the truth," she said. Westminster Abbey and Lincoln Cathedral are among the places gearing up for a huge increase in domestic and international visitors as a result of the film. The Harry Potter films brought large numbers of extra visitors to Gloucester, Goathland in North Yorkshire and Alnwick in Northumberland, while Lincolnshire Tourism is now promoting itself as Pride and Prejudice country, in recognition of the box-office hit filmed around Stamford.

LIFE ON THE STRAND

WITH GUY RITCHIE'S MUCH-ANTICIPATED MOVIE SCHEDULED FOR RELEASE DEC. 25, HERE'S OK!'S GUIDE TO THE SUPER-SLEUTH'S CITY

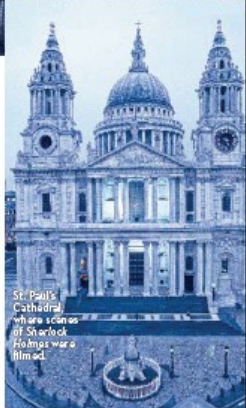

Jude Law (as Dr. Watson) and Robert Downey Jr. (as Sherlock Holmes) filming in London.

SHERLOCK HOLMES' LONDON

WHY SHOULD I GO? Literature's legendary detective is back — a Christmas present from British director Guy Ritchie. Starring Robert Downey Jr. as Holmes, Jude Law as his stalwart partner, Dr. Watson, and Rachel McAdams as Irene Adler, the master sleuth's love interest, the film — though not based directly on Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's tales — is set in late-19th-century London. With the city as his backdrop for the upcoming blockbuster, Guy re-created Victorian London's spooky, foggy lanes, cobbled streets and gaslit alleys. So whether you're a die-hard Conan Doyle fan or an amateur detective ready to test your own powers of deduction, a trip to England's capital is elementary!

62 AUGUST 17, 2009 OK!

WHAT SHOULD I DO?

First order of business: a trip to that famed address — 221b Baker St. — where Holmes and Watson "lived" from 1881 to 1904. Here lies the Sherlock Holmes Museum, a faithful reproduction of the duo's home, complete with Holmes' pipe, violin and magnifying glass. Next, walk along the Strand, once the hub of Victorian nightlife, to get a feel of late-19th-century London, full of mystery and intrigue as described in the books. (Check out London Walks, if you want a guided tour.) Stop by Simpson's-in-the-Strand — where, as depicted by Conan Doyle, Holmes would dine after solving a baffling case. The filming locations include Brompton Cemetery (today used mainly as a public park); magnificent St. Paul's Cathedral (where scenes were shot on the geometric staircase); and the Priory Church of St. Bartholomew the Great (where Guy Ritchie played his guitar between takes).

Indulge in a pint of bitter at The Sherlock Holmes Pub, the former location of the Northumberland Arms Inn featured in The Hound of the Baskervilles.

WHERE SHOULD I STAY?

The Milestone Hotel in Kensington offers an ideal base for any Sherlock Holmes adventure. No two rooms or suites are identical at this posh spot, once a private mansion. OK! stayed in the magnificent Tudor Suite (left), adorned with a four-poster bed and a chamber music room.

Conan Doyle set a few Sherlock Holmes stories, such as "A Scandal in Bohemia" and "The Sign of Four," partly at The Langham London, which first opened in 1865. Situated in the West End, the hotel shines anew thanks to a recent $130-million refurbishment. Rarely is old-world opulence mixed so seamlessly with high-end, modern design. And for shoppers, the hotel is a hop away from London's flagship Topshop store. OK! — Brian Campion

HOW DO I GET THERE?

Virgin Atlantic offers nonstop service to London from many U.S. cities. If visiting Dartmoor, BritRail offers train service from Paddington (London) to Exeter; the moor is a short drive from the Exeter train station.

DARTMOOR AND THE HOUND OF THE BASKERVILLES

Holmes fans can't miss Dartmoor National Park, the setting of Conan Doyle's creepiest tale, The Hound of the Baskervilles, which he wrote while staying there in 1901. Just two and a half hours from London by train, the park is world famous for its hauntingly desolate, windswept moorland. While there, be sure to visit the spectacular Bovey Castle. Built in 1906 as an Edwardian mansion, it's now a hotel, attracting guests like Madonna (OK! stayed in her room). Bovey sports one of the area's best golf courses, amid beautifully landscaped grounds.

Key Learnings – Film Tourism Marketing

Working with the studios:

- Forward Planning - liaise on joint promotion 6-9 months in advance of release date – films like Harry Potter and Bond need 12 months.
- Get a contract – to cover use of film association for destination marketing.
- Think like the studio – their primary objective is bums on cinema seats – your marketing pitch has to drive this as well as deliver visitors to the destination .

Pick the right film:

- Categorise your film – assess the profile of the film based on story recognition, cast, profile of the destination as itself!
- PR - Film press coverage is the most cost effective way to increase destination/ tourism business profile.....Remember the hotel from Four Weddings?? 'That room had a 3yr waiting list!
- Marketing campaign – Ride on the hype....put your marketing out before the film actually releases then you will benefit from the studio's marketing.

Thank you
